The ball had departed. The boy climbed up the twine and was lost to sight. After waiting a while the juggler, apparently in a rage, seized a scimitar and climbed after the boy, and disappeared on the amateur Jacob's ladder. In a few minutes various installments of the boy returned to earth again; first one leg neatly chopped off, then another, then two arms, trunk and head, all bleeding. Mrs. Biavatsky asserts that she and others of the spectators, who numbered over one hundred, dipped their handskerchiefs in the blood and found it to be the genuine article. Slowly the juggler descended, a bleeding scimitar in his hand. He threw a cloak over the fragments of the boy, and presto! changed the shaved-off little shaver leaped to his feet perfectly sound, joined together and alive.

Puck declares that Stanley, the explorer, recently sent a private letter to a friend, in which he stated that the most beautiful place he had seen in all his travels was Nijazjizjizjiz, on the southern shore of Lake Nyayiyiyiyi.

Grand Orchestra Concert. The last concert of the season, by the Cincinnati Grand Orchestra, was given at P. K.'s Music Hall last night, and was, in all respects, a grand finale.

The close of the fourth season finds the Cincinnati Grand Orchestra so firmly settled in the affections of our people, that there is no doubt of a brilliant future for it, with a more generous support than it has ever had before.

On all occasions when the musical credit of our city was at stake it has borne itself with distinction, and has many a time done so well as to make up for shortcomings by others that would otherwise have been remarked.

The next season may be regarded under the most favorable auspices, and a report as substantial as is deservedly given the Cincinnati Grand Orchestra is the wish of hosts of admirers and friends. This wish of itself will go far towards making it so.

Miss E. Wagner's fine contralto voice was listened to with great pleasure by the audience last night. She was a little nervous, but sang quite well.

The Southern Road. At 3 o'clock this afternoon the Southern Railroad Trustees were to meet the sub-committee of the incorporators of the Southern Railroad Company on the following questions:
